

Project: MAAN Development Center

SIDA programme has four inter-related outcomes that will be targeted: (1) Small-scale agricultural farming systems are more productive, sustainable, and responsive to market demand in the selected commodity value chains, through a market system approach. (2) Market systems in selected VCs are efficient, transparent, inclusive and rewarding for women and men small-scale producers. (3) Enabling policies and market regulations are more inclusive and better promote the interests of small-scale producers; and, (4) Local partners and relevant sector organizations can practice market systems approach for pro-poor and resilient agriculture development. As part of SIDA programme, MAAN will be one of the partners working under a market systems approach to introduce interventions that tackle some of the bottlenecks and constraints within their respective value chain. MAAN will be working on the Potato value chain in Gaza as well as mainstreaming policy influencing in Gaza. Furthermore, MAAN will work alongside other partners to identify policy and cross-cutting issues across the agricultural sector, mobilizing farmers and initiating collective campaigns to address these issues. The interventions will be at various levels across the value chain, including at farm level (production), market systems level (demand), and enabling environment (policies and institutions). Work on these value chains will be undertaken with different market actors, including producer groups, cooperatives, social enterprises, unions and federations, private sector, and relevant ministries.
